Tothe Reader.

These good frend: thus muche I crave, These few requestes I say: No browes to bende: but first with save, To sudge by like allay.

And if ye spie: as much ye may, where strayd amiss I have: To mend where I: went out of way, with art moze sad and grave.

But reade it round: and hacke it not, as immblying thost with long: Expecte them found: and racke them not, as learners ble among.

Accent in place: your boyce as needth, note number, poynte, and time: Both lyfe and grace: good reading breedth, flat berfe it reput sublime.

Dblerne the trayne: the ceasure marke, Lo rest with note in close: Kythmedogrell playne: as dogs do barke, ye make it els to lose.

Reade oft inough: well spell the lyne, less sarr to heare by vie: If verie be rough: no fault is myne, if ye the eare abuse.

But princepall thing: pour lute to tune, that hart may ling in corde: your voyce and fring: to fine to prune, to love and ferue the Lorde.

Paule. Epbe. 5. Col. 3.

Syng Pfalmes and hymnes: and fonges on hye;
To God your felues among:
But fing in hart: make melodye;
To God geue thankes in fong.

Iames. V.

I fad ye be: and beare the croffe, In faith pray ye contrite: If glad ye be: and feele no loffe, Sing Plalmes of thankes aright.

Dauid, Psalme. 33. 47. 68.

IN Lute and Harpe: reioyce to sing.

Syng Psalmes in decachorde:

Of all the earth: sith God is Kyng.

Syng wisely feare the Lorde.

Iefus Syrach. 44.

The fathers olde: both lought and found,
Sweete mulikes moodes full fine:
The Scripture longes: they did expound;
Their bartes were all denine.

No mufike hinder thou:
Where hearyng wanth: spare wordes the more,
And modeltie allow.

Of the vertue of Pfalmes.

Dat man hath hart: in beautines With funday cares oppaels: And would have helpe: in redines, To heale his thoughtfull back.

And yet by man: in succetie, for Philike want his cure: Thus let in hard: perpleritie, To God yet trusting sure.

Let him beholde: the melodie, of Danids blillefull harpe: In Platines there fynde: his remedie, He may of care to tharpe.

Afforegne foe: or ennemy, Hath walled all thy coaltes: Po helpe thou cante have fuerly, more firing to dawnt his boaltes.

If theenes thy goodes: have caught in net, And have made thee ful bare: In Plannes thy mynde: if thou do let, they will thy losse repayse.

If woung thou beeft: by tyzannie, And banishte out of land: Thou may it releane: thy miserie, Content by Platines to Cand.

Aftragne be layd: all craftely, An spite to trap thy way: Wake Davids loze: than reddy, And bid thy foes go play.

Then

Of the vertue of

Thou mournst and sighest in doulefull hart, by beath thy children gone: If Plaimes thou takest in ghostly part, They will assuage thy mone.

In house and land: if pooze thou lye, bowne cast on both thy knees: Here maist thou have: recoverie, for all that thou canst leese.

If panges and paynes: both tharpe and fell, with gripes thy body waynges: Sweete Dauids harpe: can eafe thee well, for it good Philike linges.

If borne thou be: enuiouslie,
In skorne and great disdayne:
Po patrone thou: canst better spie,
then Danids life and raigne.

Thy hie degrée: is low deient, by fortunes turnyng blaft: If Danids Cate: thou feelt reient, thou halt be lefte agait.

Thy fieldes lye all: in baren fort, by burnyng Sunne his heate: To Danids welles: if thou refort, His dewes thy foyle that weete.

Agayne if they: be overflowne, By rage of water Areames: If Davids Palmes: thou makest thine owne, Thy loyle must feele his beames. (D foolife men: that marke the faie, The Starres and Planets gate: By them to fearche: their destenie, and so repose their state.)

And thus what wo:03 milerie, may move 03 freat thy hart: In Plaines thou mayli:have remedie, to beare all payne and imart.

Pot beare them well: I onely faie, but them expell ful arong: Who like in hart: can them defraie, as Dauid did among.

Pot thus alone: half thou thine eale, of worldly griefe and payne:
But here thou mayff: all foules difeale, by comfort tweete retrayne.

So dépe in sinne: no wight can bé, no conscience so thiall: But press reliefe: bere may be sé, to repse his deadly fall.

Po wight can be: so burdenous,
mans senses harde to prese:
But Psalmes that be: so bertuous,
can some the weight redress.

Pow go and learche: the Discipline,
of mostall men to bayne:
Who taught by wit: os fost denine,
of them these beloes to gayne.

purpole in Chiffe (frende Marcellyne) not onelye for I that thou dooft so valiantly beare this present advertis tie, wherin thou balt luffered right many paynefull difplefures: as, for that thou haft not caft of & renounced tho continuall fludy: for when I enquired of the bearer of thy letters bow thou spetft thy lyfe after thy sichnes, I bnder floode plainly, y thou wholy applieft all thy diligence to boly feripture, but more specially to the booke of plalmes labouring with thy felfe to this ende, that thou mightelt comprehende the fecret hidden fence of energe plalme: for which thing I must loue thee so much the more, for that I my felfe beare fo great affection toward that booke, as to none almost so muche in all the whole Scripture, the rather fo enflamed therunto by the perswasion of that auntient olde father Philoponus, who once in a learned Difcourfe that he bouchfaued to make buto me. made euident demonstration: that whatsoener was conteyned abroade in the whole Script ure, was fullye reported in the plals ter booke: So that the matter of the v. bookes of Moles. the substaunce of the in bookes following, the bookes of the kinges with their supplementes, all the mysteries of Chill, a of the vocation of the Bentiles, which were trea ted by the 1920phets in their bookes feucrally: The bokes of the Plaines (beyng wel refembled to a pleafant garden of all delicioulnes) did brinerfally by Metre expresse them all, by playing them as it were fweetely byon muficall inftrunentes. In whiche his conference he also noted, that the booke of the Plalmes had this peculiar grace and obfernation chieflye by it selfe, that beside other matters by which it bath an agreable proportion and fellowship, with other bookes of the feriptures, it bath this in a maruclous consideration proper to bimself alone (sayth be) that it co= terneth the motions, the mutations, the alterations of ene ry mans bart and confcience described and linely paynted to his owne light, so that if a man lift, be might easely as= ther out thereof certaine confiderations of bunfelfe as out of a bright glaffe and playne vaterne fet before his face. fo therby to refouring bunfelfe as be red therin: for in other bookes bookes (farth he) onely we heare the preceptes of the law. what oughte to bee done, and what bridging, me heare the matter of prophery, to the entent we found not bee impos raunt of Chaites comming buto be in the fielde: furthermore, we reade the histories, wherby the acres of kynges & bolv fathers minbt be knowne & brought to remebrance, but in the bookes of the walmes, over and above that, we learne and heare all thefe forefaid things fufficiently: there enery one may fee and perceive the motions and affections of his owne hart and foule, both to fee whereto be is inclined, and where he is streyned and pinched, so that be mave baue a very good fouring of prayer therfore, not that thefe motions fould lightly fal from his confideration, affoone as he have hard them but to learne bow he may heale these his affections and passions, by worde and by deede. There be in other bookes wordes and fentences, which forbid diuers vices and enormities, but this booke prescribeth a forme bow a man may be cleare of them & bow to suove them. As in example, we bee bidden to repente bs, & to do venance, a told further we be, that truly to revent be, is to cease from sinning: but in this booke is there a forme set out buto by, bow to do penaunce, and what is meete to be faid melently at hand in that case and state. Furthermore 6. Baule teacheth in his doctrine, that tribulatio worketh parience, patience bringeth in probation, and probation breadeth hope, a hope is never alhamed, but in the plaime is fet out, howe tribulation (hould be borne, and by what waies every one of bs is tryed and proved, and what kind of mayer we may ble, to come by this hope in Bod. Also it is commaunded in precept, that we shoulde geue thankes in all thinges. Dowe both the plaime expresse, what is incete to be favo when we do gene thankes. Mozeoner, we beare of other places of Scripture, that all such as wil line godly in Chilt. Chall fuffer perfecution & advertitie: where in the Plalmes we learne how we fould be affected when me be exilde, and there to flee from tyrannye. In them we learne who they be which fuffer perfecution, & what thank full mayers they ought to offer to God, whiche be escaped and delinered from the purlute of their enemies. So like= wife we be charged to bleffe the Aord, and to laude him in all thinges, but how and in what fourme we should praise god, and what words we flould pronounce in our laudes fin= C.i.

finaind, we baut that inflenction in the Blalmes onelve. To be thost, we may there finde in energy tale as may role most beuine songes and ballets, perreinvng as wel to our felfe in perfon, as to our deprices and flate whatforuer we be in. There is also in the Walalmes (layo be) one other mer uclous thing to be expended : for when in other bokes of Scripture belide, we reade fuch thinges as the boly fathers eyther spake in worde or did leave in writyng (we fo reade them as though we femed but to recite and rehearle them onely, and they which dog beare by when wee reade fuch matters, fraight way they conceive in their imagina= tion that they be other mens wordes and dedes that they beare, and in suche fort are they enflamed to those matters so rehearsed that they bend themselves to be as followers to them to counterfayte the like. But whofoener take this booke in his bande, he reputeth a thinketh all the wordes he readeth (except the wordes of prophecy) to be as his be= ry owne wordes froken in his owne person, yea and who focuer do but here them reade, be is fo affected to them, as be were the very man that read them, or first spake them. and fo is disposed to warde the wordes of the berses, when they bee bettered, as they were properlye his owne anclos wordes, first by bim concepued and pronounced. So that be hall not esteme the in a linguler respect, referring those mordes to the persons of the Patriarches, or of Morses, or of any of the prophets: for as much as the plaine without respect of persons do expresse as well the righteous man, which obeyeth gods precepts, as the finners which transgreffe his preceptes, with all their decdes they do. So that all maner of men mult needes be comprehended in them. as of whome the Walnes make fo plaine mention. And berely me thinke the plalmes be to bin, which fingeth the as a classe where he mave beholde the whole affections of his foule, which to becered to his owne fight, he may be clare forth to other: for who that beareth a man readyng fuch kynde of poelie, undoubtedly be taketh it fo to hunfelf as it were onely of himselfe, and so while conscience bathe remode in the hearyng, be is therby compunct and flyred to repentaunce, & fornetpine hearing what grace the plaim both expresse as done by Christe to his electes, and what dope they may baue in him, be must needes in the conteins plation thereof begin to reloyce in his confcience and gene Bod bis thankes, wherupon he which final fina the third plaime, in beholding his owne advertice, he mail fo reporte it, as though they were his owne very wordes. who that Mall rehearle the 10, and 17, vialmes. De shall so beter them, as he pronounced his owne bope and trult, who that read the rinfalme. to speaketh he the woodes of a penitent contrite harte, as they were bis in beede. And who that praveth the 54.56.57.142, be is not fo bif= poled in them. as though be should weake of some other which suffreth perfecution on, but as be himfelfe felt the fame in deede, and therfore, lingeth to Bod thole woodbes as his very own wordes and petitions. (553)

Of the vie and vertue of the

LI holye Scripture is certenly the teacher of all vertue and of the true faith: but the booke of the Pfalmes doth expresse after a certaine manner the verye state and condition of the soule. For as he whiche entendeth to present himselfe to a kyng, firste will compounde with himselfe to set in good order both his gesture and speache, least els he might be reputed rude and ignoraunt. Euen so doth this godly booke enforme all fuche as be defirous to leade their life in vertue, and to knowe the life of our faujour, which he led in his bodely conversation, put ting them in mynde in the reading therof: First, of all their affections and passions wherto their soule is inclined. Moreouer, the Pfalmes forme and teacheeuery man with divers instructions, whereby he maye not onely espy the affections and state of his soule, & to winne a good paterne and discipline, how he may please God, but also with what forme of woordes he may amend himselfe, & how to geue God due thanks least if he should speake otherwise then were conuenient, he should fall into impietie by his vnreuerent estimation to Cha for we must all make an accounte to the judge, as well of our euil dedes as of our idle wordes

LI manner of Scripture for that it is inspierde Anno Dofrom God aboue (as necessary for instructio) is expressed by the determination of the holy gost mini. 380. to the intent that all men in commen, shoulde gather out therof (as out of a storehouse of Phisike for the foule) peculiar remedies, every one of vs for our owne infirmities : for fuch Phisike as a certaine writer testifieth will restraine great and many sinnes. Now where as the Prophetes have doctrine proper to themselues, and the bokes of the deuine histories matter by themselfe: the law have his peculiar forme of teaching, and the Prouerbiall bookes have their feuerall kinde of exhortations. The booke of the pfalmes comprehende in it felfe, the whole commoditie of all their doctrines aforefaid, for it prophecieth of thinges to come, it reciteth the histories, it theweth lawe for the gouernaunce of life, it teacheth what ought to be done, and to be shorte, it is a common storehouse of al good doctrine, which doth aptly distribute matter to every man peculiar to himself for it healeth not only olde festured woundes of the foule, but also can geue quicke remedy to suche as be newly made. It stayeth and comforteth that member which is ficke and corrupt, & preserveth that which is whole and found, it plucketh vp by the rootes (as much as is possible) all such euil affectios as do raign fo tirannically in the whole course of mans life, which effect it worketh as it were with agreable delectation instilling pleasantly into our hart, all sober honestye. For where as the holy ghost perceived that mankind was hardly trayned to vertue, & that we be very negligent in thinges concerning the true life in dedc, by reason of our inclination to worldly pleasures & delectations: What hath he invented? he hath mixte E.1].

in his forme of doctrine the delectation of musike, to thintent that the commoditie of the doctrine might secretlye steale into vs, while our eares bee touched with the pleasauntnes of the melodie. Euen muche like as expert Phisitions vse to doo, when they minister their bitter potions to sicke children, least they should abhorre their helth, for the bitternes of their drinkes, for the most part they annointe the brinkes of the cuppes with hony. And for this ende bee thefe fweete and harmonious fonges deuised for vs, that fuch as be children either by age or children by maners, should in deede haue their soules wholesomely instructed, though for the time they seme but to sing onely. Furthermore, we see commonlye that they which be of the vulgare people, or of rude and groffe nature, can not redely beare away and kepe in mynde the graue preceptes of the Apostles or Prophetes, where yet the denine pfalmes they fynge at home in their houses, and abrode they can recorde them. And certainly though a man were neuer to furiouslye raging in ire and wrath, yet affone as he heare the fwete tunes of the Pfalmes, ftraight way is he asswaged of his fury, and must depart more quiet in mynd by reafon of the melodie. The plalme is the rest of the foule. the rodde of peace, it stilleth and pacifieth the ragying bellowes of the minde, for it doth affwage and mollife that irefull power and passion of the soule, it induceth chastity, where reigned wantonnes, it maketh amitie, where was discorde, it knitteth frendes together, it returneth enemies to an vnitie againe : For who can long repute him as an enemy, with whom he iovneth himselfe in lifting vppe hys voyce to God in prayer. So that the fong of the Pfalme worketh charitie, whiche is the greatest treasure of all goodnesse that can be, denifing by this inducement of concord finging the knot and bonde of vnitie, so ioyning the people together after the similitude of a quiere in their vnitie of finging.

The Pfalme is an introduction to beginners, it is a furtherer to them which go forwarde to vertue, it is to the perfect man a stable foundation to rest on, it is the swete voyce, the onely mouth of the spouse of Christ the church. The psalme doth cheare the feastful day, the better to reioyce, it worketh that same heauines whiche is heauines to godwarde: for the psalme is able to plucke out teares of any mans hart: though it be neuer so stony harde.

O wife and merueilous deuise of our heauenlye scholemaister, who could inuent, that we should both pleasantly sing and therwith profitably learne, where by wholesome doctrine might bee the deper printed in vs: for that which with violence and force is learned of vs, is not wont to abide long, but that which entreth into vs with pleasure, and by louing grace it continues the lenger in our hartes, it sticketh the safter in our memories.

Now as for the matter and content of the Psalme, what is there, but that a man maye learne it there? Is not there to be learned the valiauntnes of fortitude? The righteou fnes of instice? The sobernes of temperance? The perfection of prudence? The forme of penaunce? The measure of patience? Yea and what soe uer soundeth to vertue or perfection is it not there taught?

In the Pfalme is conteined absolute divinitie, both prophecy of christes comming in the sless. The thret-full warninges of the judgement. The hope of our rising agayne. The feare of Gods punishmentes. The promises of everlasting joye. The revelatio of all mysteries, all these be laide and couched up in the Pfalter booke, as in a great treasure house common to al men. Which booke the Prophet David framed most E.iii. aptly aptly (among many instruments of musike) to agree with the instrumente called the Psaltrie. Significing therby (as I can judge) the grace of God to come fro boue by the inspiration of the holye ghost: for thys onely instrumente of all other haue the cause of hys sounde from his vpper parte, where the harpe or the lute by their wrestes have their sound coming forthe out of the lower parte of them, but the psalterye put forth the swetenes of his harmonious melodic from the vpper part, teaching vs therby that we should set our whole study and meditation in heavenly thinges aboue, and not by the sweetenes of the tunes to bee borne downe to the sensual affections and delectations of the slesse.

Chrisostomus. In Psalmos. to.2. ho. 15. S this life is susteyned by meate, which it doth straighte way ministre after it be receyued, even fo if we bestowe our endenour to vertuous actes, we shall obtaine Gods line lye sprite, by the possession whereof, we shall flowe in all good workes, which on the other side if we performe not, the sayde Sprite will flee from vs, of whome if we be destitute, we muste nedes halte in any doing we have : for if this holy forite should depart from vs, confequently wil the wicked sprite enter, which thing may clearely be learned in Saule who was fore baunted therwith. Now what should it helpe vs, though we be not vex ed so extreemely wyth suche a spirite, as Saule was vexed, if we bee tormented and choked by malicious actes and wretched dedes: We have therefore muche neede to have Davids harpe, to fing to our foule some divine harmony, as well gotten out of the Prophet, as also flowing from good life, so that whether of them both we vie, that is either to fing some Pfalme or Song of Dauid, or yet to beginne a vertuous life, we shal therby destroy the denils power in vs, as readily as David was wont to aswage Saules fury with his harpe: And this shall be our principall remedy to obtaine all righteousnes to the healthe of our foule, yea beside this the denill shall rage so much the more in fury, when he feet b that for all his finfull fue gestions, we be nothing drawne to enill, for these ungratious and uncleane spirites are even in the beginning of their temptations afrayde. least we should bane occasion genen vs by their wicked suggeftions to turne our whole entent the rather to worke fome laudable acte. So that when they fee we stande and persener stedfastly, they rage the more, for that they bee fo frustrate in all their busie care they have to hurt vs. Wherupen, after our victory so gotten, let us sing out some song of thankes, the farther to beate from vs that divelish importune asault of our enemy: for the deuill in deede cannot vtterly deprine vs of beauen, no, for many times he is a furderer to vs, by his warryng against vs, so that we be watching warely at him, and vse sobernes to Winne beauen, from whence wilfully many be cast by their un grations and finfull lining. And verely, what socuer he be that offendeth of purpofe, and that of fet will rageth in mischiefe, is a plaine deuili, and is not worthy to have pardon or favor of any man. Les us therfore fing to that soule that is affected with other sayinges of holy scripture, specially Danids Psalmes: In suche wise that the outwarde voyce maye edifie the inwarde mynde. Doubtlese, when we instructe and frame our tongue thus to fing, the conscience of man must needes be ashamed if he doo not preserve that thing at the least whiche he syngeth, though his disposition inclineth to the contrary. So that by this meane we shall not winne that commoditie, but manye other commodities, as we shall for example reherse. First, the prophet Danid wrote not onely of thinges that were to come, but he disputeth of these visible creatures, of the invisible forme of the firmament. Now if peraduenture thou desirest to be taught whether this firmament shal stand firmely in that same fate that it is of now or no, will not David straightway aunfiver thee and faie. The heavens shall waxe olde as doth a garment, and thou O Lord shalt chaunge them as a vesture, for they shall be transposed. Also if thou desirest to heare of the facion of the beauens, by him maist thou understand it writing thus, I ftretcht ont the heavens like a curtayne. Befide 104 this, if thou wouldest knowe further of the backehalfe of the heanens, he shall say to thee, whiche conerest the uppermost 104 partes of heaves with waters. And yet is he not content to rest here, but maketh mention of the bredth therof, declaring that both sides be of equall distance, saying . How much the East is 103 from the West, so farre bath he put our sinnes from vs. And as bie as the heaven is from the earth, the Lorde hath so largely confirmed his mercy on them that feare him. Furthermore, yf thou wouldest searche for the foundation of the earthe, thou canst not bee ignoraunt thereof, when thou hearest him fay. For he hath found the earth upon the feas. Also if thou desirest to know the cause of the earthquakes, thou mayst under-Standit by him when he singeth thus. Who beholdeth the erth and maketh it to tremble, so that now of this thing he putteth thee quite out of doubt. Moreover, if thou longest to know the course of the nighte, even of him maist thou have this knowledge. In the night (faith he) all the beastes of the woode have their walke, and to what viethe hils were made, he also telleth it thee .The hie hils he appointed for hartes and hyndes. And 104 Wherfore the stony rockes ferue, that he describeth also, saying. 104 The cliffes and rockes be the conert to conies. And why the 104 . unfruitefull trees be there growing, there (fayth he) shall the Sparowes build their nestes. Why moreover water springes be 104 flowing in Wildernes, thus he sheweth. By them will the beafts of the field have their abiding, Alfo to know why wine serueth not for to drinke onely, seeying that water mighte supplye that Want aboundantly: but for this entent, to make the more me-104 - ry and ioconde. Wyne (fayth he) maketh glad the hart of ma Wherby thou mayst consider, how far forth wine should goe in lawfull vie: Furthermore, of him mayest thou heare, howe 104 foules and sauage beastes be nourished. They all O Lord set their eyes to thee that thou shouldest gene them meate in due season: And if thou askest a reason of the creation of thy household beastes, he will answer thee that these also were created for thy fake faying thus. Who bringeth forth grene herbe

and graße for beastes to the fernice of man. Why the Moone is nedefull: Heare of his worde. Who made the Moone for distinctions of tymes, How beside all thinges visible and inuisible were made, he she weth it clearely thus. He sayde the Worde and made they were: He commaunded, and by and by they were created. And that there shall be once a discharge from continual dyeng, he teacheth thee after this forte. God baue delinered my foule from the power of death, when he shal take me unto him. Furthermore he enformeth us, whence this our body had his originall, thus. I am (faythe he) in goodremembraunce, that I am dust and earth, and shall returne agayne to my dust whece I fprong. Furthermore that all things were created for thy sake, thus he sayth. Thou hast crowned him O Lordwith honour and glory, and fet him uppe ouer the workes of thy handes. And what similitude we mortall men have with aungels, thus he sheweth it. Thou hast abased him somewhat lower then the state of aungels. Also what love almightie God beareth to vs, thus he doth exprese it. Like as a father pitieth his children, even so hath the Lorde compassion on all them which feare him. What is layd up for us for hereafter, and what rest we shall have in the ende of this life, thus he certifieth vs. R eturne O my soule into thy rest and quiet. Furthermore, why the heaves be of so huge compasse, he sheweth thus the cause. The heavens set out to sight the glorye of God. Why the night and day were made, he telleth this also: not to gene light onely and rest, but beside this to instructe vs. There is (sayth he) no language or woordes in them, and yet their voyces be heard. Finally, in what maner God doth walke in his compase both on sea and land, he describeth it, as the epistle to the Hebrewes anoucheth the same. The deepe is ashis garment. Thus taking a tast of those thinges that be said before, ye may coniesture other thinges higher and greater, that is to say, of Christ, of his resurrection, of the toyes and paines to come: of inordinate affections of lawes and such other, so that ye cannot refort to Danids bookes, but ye shall cary thence innumerable riches: For if theu shouldest fall into any heaui-F.j.

nes, or into any enill affection of minde, thefe pfalmes wil much anaile to thy comforte. If thou be fliden into sinne, there shalte thou finde many falues to restore thee, if thou beest overladen With ponertie, or with any adversitie, in them shalt thou fee to appeare many restfull hauens for thy refuge, if thou be in state of righteousnes, there maiest thou finde howe to keepe thee in suertie therof if thou be in state of sinne, there shalt thou be put in much hope to be pardoned, of if thou sufferest many displesures for righteousnes sake, thou shalte heare Danid confese thus. For thy sake O Lord am I as daily appointed to death, and againe . We be esteemed as sheepe prepared to the slaughter, all these thinges saith he, be come on vs, and yet we have not forgotte thee, but if thou shouldst waxe proude by the sight of thy good deedes, thou shalt heare him pray. Enter not O lord into indgement with thy sernauntes, for no man on line can be instified before thy fight, and thus straight way shalt thou bee Wonne to follow humilitie. Yea furthermore if thou hast committed any thing, wherof thou might ft take dispaire, thou shalt heare him oftentimes to sing. This day if ye heare his voyce, harden not your hartes, the hearing wherof, will soone resolue the soule into repentance. Beside all this, though thou were a king gloriously crowned, and therwith hawtie and proude, yet there shalt thou learne this: That a king is not saued for all his valiauntnes, nor the Gyant is in safetie by his great power and mighte, and so by this meane thou shalt be abated in thy pride. If thou flowest in riches and glory of this worlde, thou shalt heare him againe singing. Wo be to them which trust in their power, and in the multitude of their goodes, and in an other place. Man is in his dayes as graße, whose pampe shal not go downe into the grave with him, and thus by fuch considerations thou shalt repute nothing in all the earth much to be eftemed: for if thou despisest these two thinges (I meane power and glory) which exceed all other thinges in mens estimacion, What can there be beside, wherto thou shouldst set so much thy Omy foule, and why doost thou so vexe me? Trust in the lord for I will gene him thankes. Oner this, if thou spiest manye men to have great commendation, without any cause of deserming, speake thou thus to thy selfe. Be not enuious at wycked wen, for they shall wither away like grasse, and shall fade to wought even as the grene herbe in the sield. If thou chaunce to marke how good men and evill men be both together afflicted, yet by Dausd thou shals understand, that the maner of theyr affliction is not alone, for he sayth that there be many scourges for sinners, which yet he doth not assirme to be insticted upon good men, when he saith. That the just man have many temtations, but out of them all God will deliver him, and agayne. The death of sinners is odible. Where the death of his electes is very honourable before the Lorde.

Revolue therfore such thinges as these be oft with thy selfe and by the instruction of them get thee some understandyng, for there is a large wilde siclde of wise sentences comprehended in these sayinges aforesayd: yea in every one of them thoughe they be brieflye thus vewed and perused by us. But if ye will more exactly search out these sentences of David, ye shall perceive that they will sprede into plentuous store of gostly treasure. Over and beyond that, every man that will, may by these sayinges, purge himselfe of evill vices, how fast so ever they have roote within them. If he will neither geve eare redily to enuye, neither yet to bitter malice, if he will despise riches, if he set light by adversitie, by trouble, by povertie, if he set not much by bis lyfe at all.

This maner of contemplation will far drive from us all vice and finne, for the subduing of which vices, we muste gene our thankes to God: and thus by despising these transstory goodes we may winne the goodes everlastyng, and through patience in adversitie, and by the consolatio we have in holy scripture, we may have bope, and at the last to enjoy the blisse to come thorough Iesus Christ, to whom with the father of the boly ghost, be all honor world without ende, Amen.

Anno Domini. A20. He delectation of the eares had once bound me ftrongly, yea they had subdued me, but thou (O Lorde) didst vnbinde me, and madest me free.

Now in these sweete tunes which thy holy scriptures geue fo liuely a grace vnto, when they be funge with the sweete voyce of cunning men: I do confesse that I am somwhat delectably holden, but yet not for that I would dwell and abide still there, but that my affection might be stirred to rise vowarde when I see my time. But yet these tunes and notes thus livelye made by the dittie of thy worde, the rather doo they defire to have place in me, yea they woulde my harte should have them in great affiance, which yet I have not peraduenture altogether as is most agreable. For fometime me thinke I esteme this musicall harmonie more hiely then is conueniet, as when I feele my hart to be more vehemently stirred to ardent denotion by those holy wordes, when they be so set out with song then if they were not fo funge: For this I perceyue, that all the affections of our sprites in their diversitie of natural disposition, to have their peculier properties and facions, as well in respect of the voyce, as of the tunes. So that by a secrete familiaritie and similitude that is betwixt them, the mindes of men be diuerflye affected and rauished, but the delectation of my fleih, thougheit ought not to fubdue my mynde with to much vaine and feeble sensualitie, yet it ofte deceyueth me, in that my brute senses doo not wavte on Lady Reason, as modestlye content to come after her, but they striue to go before her & would be her guide, and other cause can they alleage none, but for that by her at the first they were broughte in and admitted. And thus I offend vnbewares, thoughe afterward I perceive it. So againe while that I eschue this futtle futtle deceit of my fenses, beyond due measure I erre on the other fide, by ouermuch fower grauitie, yea fo far otherwhiles, that I would all fuch swete harmonie of delectable finging, wherewith Dauids Pfalter is vfed to be fung, vtterly removed not from mine owne eares only, but banished out of the church to as judging that waie to be more fure and furthest from perill of abuse, that I remember hath bene ofte told me done of Athanasius bishop of Alexandria, who caused the readers of the quier to recite the pfalmes in fuch euen equalitie of the voyce, that it appeared to bee more like a reading then a finging. How be it, when I cal to minde what teares I wept at the hearing of the fonges which thy churche and congregation did vie to fing to thee (O Lord) what time I first began to recouer my faith vnto thee (as me thinke euen yet still I feele my felfe ranished, not yet with the singing, but with the sweete matter which is sung, specially, when it is fung with full expressed voyces and with decent harmonie) then againe I judge this ordinance of finging to be much profitable and expedient. And thus am I toft betwixt the danger of vaine delectation and the experience of wholesome edification. But more am I inclined and induced to allowe this custome of finging in the churche (although I speake not this as in sentence diffinitiue) that the weaker sorte of men, might by suche delectation of the eare, rise vp to godly affection and heavenly devotion. Not-withstanding, when I fele this in my selfe that the melodic moueth me more then the matter of the dittie which is sung. I confesse then that I offend mortally therin, & then wish I rather not to heare such singung then so to heare it.

Hen Dauid was at rest from warres and other such daungers, and had now peace at will, he composed songes and hymnes to God of divers Metres, some trimetres and some quinquemetres, and caused divers instruments to be made, and he taught the Leuites how they shoulde in their diversities sing and playe hymnes on the Saboth and other feastivall daies: Of which instrumets some as the harpe were lowde and shirle made of ten stringes, which were touched with the one end of the wrest. Nabla was of xij. stringes and tunes, and was playde on with the singers. There were also Cymbals of brasse both large and broade.

Hilo an Hebrewe borne, who as reporte goeth, came to Rome in Emperour Claudius daies, and faw Peter the Apostle, and was his auditor hearyng the doctrine he preached, amonge other thinges that he wrate of the christian sect, sayth thus. The christen people haue in all places of their assemblies, houses dedicated wholve to prayer, into the which they resorte aparte by themselfe, and there vse to have their mysteries ministred in most honest and chast life, wherein they bring nothing that serue for eating & drinking, or for any other corporall necesfitie of the body, but onely the bookes of Gods lawe and of the Prophetes, and hymnes made to God and fuch like things as these be, by which discipline & ver tuous exercise, they be together edified, & so by daily continual diligence they attaine to very perfect life. Furthermore, they do not onely vnderstand the auntient hymnes of their Elders, but they themselues deuise uise newe to Gods honour, whiche they sing with all kinde of graue numbers and rythmes in a comely ho nest maner, and with sweete harmonic. And surthermore Philo saith, our hymnes are so song with vs, Niceph. si. that where one (as Chanter) singeth before one verse 2.64.16. orderly and comely by obseruing the certentie of his numbers, all the multitude beside, secretly eguving eare vnto him, at the laste syng together the latter partes of the hymnes.

many right eloquent oratours, for they have werses and Poesies made by moste exquisite arte and cunning, as that great Canticle of Moses, & the ris. Psalme of Danid, be composed in Heroicall Metre, which is called verse Exametre. They have also such other, as well trimetres and tetrametres, which as concerning the composition of them be deuised moste eloquently, substantially, and pleasantly, and as concerning the sence and matter of them, no mans writing is to be compared with them, for in them are expressed gods wordes, and wordes of mere truth, wherein be conteyned godly doctrine, knowledge of notable thinges, and wholesome conclusions.

Idem Eusebius, lib. 12. ca. 14.

Plato that deuine Philosoper, indged that Metres ought to be sung, for (sayth he) disciplines be sit for education and bringyng up of Children, to traine them to a right life & lawful conversatio. To the entent therfore that childrens myndes might follow the lawe, that therwith they should both ioy & mourne, let them learne Metres and songes, and let them sing oft such. Wherein be conteyned the commendations and condenations of such things which the lawes commend and condemne, because the tender wittes and yeares of children, can not comprise the reason of vertue, they be well prepared therto by play and song. Not without good skill therfore doo we (Christian men) vse, that children doo learne the the canticles of the Prophetes.

Necessarie it were (as the saide Plato affirmeth) that Poetes (who be inuenters of such Meters) were forced forced by lawe, that in their verfes, when they be describinga bleffed man in felicitie, to praise none other for such, but him that is a good man, modest & rightfull in his doyng, whether he belittle or great. riche or poore. And that who locuer were a wrong doer, to call him mifer, thoughe he were richer then Crefus or Mydas, Let these Poetes therfore call no man a bleffed man, excepte he come by these goodes (which be so called of the vulgar people) both rightfully, and also rightfully dispend the same. And suche matters beyng compiled in their rythmes and verses were good for the youth to learne. As Dauid inspierd with the grace of gods holy sprite so described a blesfed man in his Odys and fonges longe before these dayes, teaching who is truely a bleffed man, and who is contrary. In the beginning of his Pfalter faying: Blesed is that man whiche walketh not in the counsayles of Wicked men, &c.

And furthermore writeth Plato, that it is a grace fpecially belonging to God himfelfe, or to some perfect man chosen by him: well to vse rythmes & verfes, and therefore it were good that there were diligent law prouided for them that they should have no other respect, but to set out vertue, to which ende all Musike shoulde be applied. Asit was so prouided among the Hebrues, who were restrained from receywing any other hymnes and fongs, then fuch as were composed by the Prophetes, who were inspired by the holy ghost. Furthermore, I graunt to Plato in this thing which is commonly spoken, that delectation & plesant satisfieng of the eare is judge to musike. But I fay that is best musike, which delighteth good men & learned men, & specially such as excell others in yertue. And therfore vertue must bee judge in this case, specially fortitude and prudence, and not Musike to be esterned good by the allowance of the rude people which which be led and blinded with ignoraunce and wyth cowardly base affections. For so among the Iewes of olde time, the judgement of divine fonges, was not permitted to the multitude , but some there were; thogh thei were but a few, which judged these things by divine inspiration, who had the authoritie to con fecrate(as I might fay) and to approue the bookes of the Prophetes, as also to disalowe and to reiect suche as they thought disagreable from Gods holy spirite.

Basilius in concione ad adolescentes.

Fol. 250.

Imotheus the Musitió, so excelled in that arte and facultie, that he coulde stirre vp a mannes mynde to anger by his roughe and fower harmonie, & could asswage and release them agayne by a foft kinde of harmonie at his will and pleasure: Of whom it is writte, that when he had at a tyme before Alexander fung the Phrigian harmonie, he excited him as he was at supper, to runne to warre, and again by his most gentle and easie harmonie, brought hym again to the table among his geftes. Such strenght & vertue is fet in the true vse of musike. As Pithagoras once by chance was in copany among a fort of wanto & drunken folke, wherupon, he bad the mynstrell to change his fong & to rebuke their dissolute wantonnes with playing to them the Dorian harmonie, by which musike they were cast so in a shame of theselfe, that they threw from the their garlands, & fled home all confused for their lightnes, where before by the harmonie he played, they raged in fury as men out of their wittes. So muche auaileth it to have our eares filled with vertuous or vitious fonges, wherefore I would you men should have fo little a do with such fonges of musike, as nowe a dayes be moste set by as they would with any thing most monstruous and vicious, ye let them ensue that other kinde of musicall fonges fonges muche better then the other, and faileth vs. to better thinges. I meane that was vied of Dauid the Poete of holye fonges, by which he paelified the mynde of Saule when he was in his raging faired.

Nicephorus telleth that the catholike church from the beginning hath receyued the custome of finging Plalmes and hymnes.

And the auntient church even from the aposses Ling. ea. 8 have received the maner of anthems, that is, to sing their songes by sides and by course. And it is said that divine Ignatives, which was the third Bishop in Antioche churche, from Peter the Aposse who lived also a long tyme with the Aposses, beyng in a traunse saw a new vision, how that the holy aungels did extol in praise the biesed Trimese with their songs, by course one answering an other.
